

April 6, 2006

Greetings!

I am writing in response to Wal-Mart's plans of creating its own banking system. Although this may seem a safe and innocent feat, I believe that this step would only hurt communities even more than they have from the monopoly of this supercenter in their towns.

Many towns rely on small business for sustenance; Wal-Mart is a threat to such business, and has already succeeded in winning over customers with their low-pricing scheme.

Please consider this matter very carefully and ask, "When will enough be enough for Wal-Mart?" Wal-Mart has a great deal of global power. It is clear that they capital interests rather than the best interests of communities here in the U.S. or abroad, at heart.

Please do not let Wal-Mart get away with undermining one more local community or exploiting one more laborer.

Sincerely,

Kristen Bunting